In your course’s Course Reports options, a Single Course User Participation Report is meant to display the number of user submissions in a course for assignments, tests, discussions, blogs, and journals within a chosen time frame. However, when an instructor runs this report in a course, the results spreadsheet that the report generates contains no information.

Blackboard has identified this as a software defect and plans to resolve it in a future patch or service pack update. At this time, there is no work-around available.
